Electrical
Industry 2026

As 2025 ends, The Electrical Advertiser wanted to take a look at the highlights of the Electrical Industry and look towards the future in 2026.

Clean energy and renewables are surging: innovations in battery tech, solar/wind, and clean power are making measurable progress. The industry as a whole is seeing strong revenue growth: The annual "Top 50 Electrical Contractors" survey by EC&M found that their collective revenues rose 15% in 2024 (to about US$59.5 billion) largely driven by demand in data centers, energy/infrastructure and digital market.

As the trade evolves beyond wiring into smart systems, renewables and electrification there is a surge in hiring qualified technicians. Labor is a driving force and a skilled and educated workers are needed.

The National Electrical Contractors Association (NECA) & National Electrical Manufacturers Representatives Association (NEMRA) training initiative In March 2025 they launched a new training program, "Education for Success in Electrical Markets," targeted at manufacturer reps so they can better support contractors and job-sites. The program covers key industry topics (codes, safety, site operations) and aims to improve the contractor-support ecosystem.

Electricians, plumbers, welders, HVAC techs are in strong demand. Aging workforce in trades means fewer replacements, so job security is high. One highlight to this is as of October 27, 2025, IEC has more than 20,000 apprentices enrolled in its programs nationally. This shows an uptick vocational training to replace the retiring skilled labor.

The ELECTRI International held its 2025 Electrical Contracting Innovation Challenge (ECIC), where university student chapters partnered with contractor firms on design-build challenges — the 2025 winner was Penn State University. Innovation challenges promote new ideas, bridge academia & industry, and expose students to electrical contracting as a career.

Electrical companies in 2025 have had to adjust much of their business due to growth in EV/renewables/retrofit/smart-buildings. Hiring and retaining talent, and creating clear career paths is essential. Staying Stay aware of pricing, lead-times, prefabrication options, and aim to lock in supply early due to the ever-changing market and supply chain risk can be the most challenging for businesses in 2026.

Marketing and Advertising will matter more than ever in the coming year. Advertising in 2026 is more critical than ever for electrical contractors and similar trades because the market, technology, and customer behavior have all shifted. Without advertising, your business may remain invisible despite being competent. In 2026 advertising is no longer optional. It's the difference between being seen versus relying on outdated methods that only reach a fraction of potential clients.
